Hi everyone. Most folks seem to celebrate some holiday or event at this time of the year. I want to wish you the best in what ever it may be. The past few years have been difficult for many of us but it seems (at least to me) that better times are coming. I look forward to returning to more normal gatherings with friends and family, travel, and life in general. I am personally optimistic, but not everything is rosy. There are still some bothersome things on the horizon. I sense there will always be some and it is important how we handle them. Somewhere in the past I ran into a phrase the went something like this "life is what you make it". I intend to sally forth and be positive in what I do. I hope that you can do the same.

Sally forthe round the roses Bruce. With the Jaynetts. I will. I'm hopeful too that a thaw is coming around for better things, everywhere. Hope everyone keeps safe through the holidays and enjoys family, friends, good health and more money in their pockets to ease the burdens. And your new audio products making a formal debut.

I'm already starting to think about Thanksgiving, Christmas, and New Year's. Which relatives can I visit on which holiday? Should I work until the x-hour (and how many days can I afford to not work)?
